

Ally Byrd helps her clients resolve complex liability litigation, often involving significant financial and reputational risk. As a tenacious litigator committed to minimizing the cost and disruption of trials for her clients, she handles products liability and mass tort lawsuits alleging economic loss, product defects, and personal injuries, and defends premises liability, workplace injury, and workers' compensation claims, as well as employment litigation. She has significant experience guiding her clients to reduce risk and mitigate exposure through comprehensive risk management and workplace safety policies.

With extensive experience advising companies on risk management issues and proposing timely and practical solutions to limit their liabilities, Ally acts as coordinating counsel for multiple national corporations. This has been an area of interest across her career: Ally's first job at age 16 was as a trainer for a restaurant, where she trained employees of newly opened locations on workplace safety, policies, and procedures and how to avoid on-the-job injuries.

Clients appreciate the positive and creative energy Ally brings to every case. They seek her guidance on developing and implementing effective safety policies. And they rely on her extensive litigation experience to get cases closed early.

A trusted voice on liability litigation, Ally regularly presents to in-house attorneys, third-party administrators, and insurance carriers on risk management, defense litigation tactics, and other issues at national trade and industry association conferences.
