Demetrius is a seasoned litigator and trial lawyer specializing in complex commercial litigation and business disputes. Demetrius has extensive experience deposing witnesses and preparing corporate representatives for deposition and trial. Demetrius presents regularly to conferences on preparing corporate representatives for deposition.

Demetrius has a JD-MBA from the University of Iowa. He began his legal career representing consumers and businesses in nationwide antitrust class actions against price-fixing cartels operating overseas. These cases generated billions of dollars in settlements. In 2019, Demetrius began taking roles defending corporations and public entities. In 2020, Demetrius was on a trial team that defended California's Department of Water Resources in a seven-week bench trial involving the Oroville Dam, which achieved a full defense judgement for the Department. Demetrius is currently based in San Francisco, where he represents high net-worth clients in a variety of legal disputes involving breach of contract and corporate governance issues.
